As you plan for the birth of your child, you may find yourself wondering what life will be like for them when they get older. While it might seem early to be thinking about college or university, ensuring a child has access to a good education will give them the best possible start in life. Consider these quick facts about the benefits of post-secondary education from Statistics Canada:

- Canada's future labour market will have a preference for skilled workers in a global, technologically advanced economy
- College and university graduates are already more likely to have a full-time job, and more likely to keep it during an economic downturn
- They also tend to earn more than Canadians without post-secondary education

According to Statistics Canada, 68.4% of Canadians between the ages of 25 and 44, and 58.1% of those aged 45 to 64 had obtained some form of post-secondary certification in 2011.

Tax sheltered savings

The cost of education is expensive and tuition fees, books, accommodation and living costs have been increasing faster than the rate of inflation. For example, between 1993-94 and 2003-04 the cost of studying dentistry quadrupled, while medical tuition costs more than tripled and studying law more than doubled.

One of the best ways to save for your child's future education is through a Registered Education Savings Plan (RESP). While you save, the government will kick in up to $7,200 through the Canada Education Savings Grant (CESG). Taking advantage of this free money can go a long way to finance your child's education down the road. Putting aside even small amounts each month will translate into substantial savings later on. When your child does attend a post-secondary institute, all your contributions are passed on to them tax-free and taxes are only paid on the investment growth and grants (usually at a much lower tax rate).

The provinces of Alberta and Quebec also offer provincial support for educational funding.
