

Wealth
Management

the Navigator

INVESTMENT, TAX AND LIFESTYLE PERSPECTIVES FROM RBC WEALTH MANAGEMENT SERVICES

François Têtu, CIM, FCSI
Vice-President & Portfolio Manager
Tel: 514-878-8790
francois.tetu@rbc.com

Groupe François Têtu & Associés of RBC Dominion Securities
1 Place Ville Marie, 5th Floor
Montreal, QC H3B 1Z3
Fax: 514-878-5070
Toll free: 1 800-890-4003
www.francoistetu.com

Deducting home office expenses for 2020

Simplified rules for salaried and commissioned employees

Millions of Canadians unexpectedly had to start working from home due to the COVID-19 pandemic. In response, the government announced plans in their Fall Economic Statement to simplify the process for deducting home office expenses. On December 15, 2020, the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) released the details on a simplified method for claiming these expenses for 2020. This simplified method has made the home office expense deduction available to more individuals.

This article discusses the circumstances in which home office expenses incurred by salaried and commissioned employees are deductible, as well as whether allowances and reimbursements provided by an employer are taxable.

Methods for claiming home office expenses

For 2020, there are two methods for claiming home office expenses on your personal tax return:

1. Temporary flat rate method
2. Detailed method

To be eligible for the temporary flat rate method, you must only be claiming home office expenses (such as electricity, home internet access fees, and office supplies like pens and paper) and not any other employment expenses (such as motor vehicle expenses). In addition, you can only use this method if your employer has not reimbursed you for all of your home office expenses. If you're in a situation where your employer has reimbursed you for some but not all of these expenses, you can still use this method.

Alternately, the detailed method can be used if you're claiming other employment expenses in addition to home office expenses, or if you have a larger claim and want to deduct the actual expenses you paid for in order to work from home. The detailed method is more complex, as you will need to separate the expenses that relate to your employment from those that relate to your personal use and keep supporting receipts or documents. Your employer must also complete certain forms in order for you to claim expenses under this method.

The temporary flat rate method

The new temporary flat rate method is a simplified way to claim your home office expenses and can only be used for the 2020 tax year. You are eligible to use this method if you worked from home more than 50% of the time for a period of at least four consecutive weeks in 2020 due to the COVID-19 pandemic. Based on that eligibility, you can claim $2 for each day you worked at home in 2020. The maximum you can claim using this method is $400 (200 working days). If more than one person in your family is working from the same home, each person can make a separate claim.

If you were not required to work from home, but your employer provided you with the choice to do so because of the COVID-19 pandemic and you opted for that choice, the CRA will consider you to have worked from home due to COVID-19.

Qualifying workdays include those you worked either full-time or part-time hours from home. Days off, vacation days, sick leave days and other leaves of absence cannot be counted as workdays.

In using this method, you do not have to calculate the size of your work space or keep supporting documents for your claim. In addition, your employer does not have to complete or sign any forms. You will, however, have to complete “Option 1 – Temporary flat rate method” on Form T777S – Statement of Employment Expenses for Working at Home Due to COVID-19 and attach the form to your personal income tax return. For more information on how to make the claim on your personal tax return, please refer to the CRA website.

For Quebec residents

If you are a resident of Quebec, Revenu Quebec will allow you to use a temporary fixed rate method to claim a personal income tax deduction on your Quebec tax return. The temporary fixed rate method mirrors the federal rules where you can claim a deduction of $2 for each day you worked at home in 2020 due to COVID-19, up to a maximum of $400. If you use the temporary fixed rate method, complete only Part 1 and Part 2 of Form TP-59.S-V, Expenses Related to Working Remotely Because of the COVID-19 Pandemic (available in January 2021) and file it with your Quebec income tax return. Your employer does not need to complete or submit any other forms and you do not need to keep supporting documents to verify the deduction.

The new temporary flat rate method is a simplified way to claim your home office expenses and can only be used for the 2020 tax year.

The detailed method

Determining your eligibility

Under the detailed method, you are eligible to claim a deduction for home office expenses for the period you worked from home, if you meet all of the following criteria:

1. You were required to work from home by your employer, or you were given the choice to do so and you opted for that choice, due to the COVID-19 pandemic. Being required to work from home does not have to be part of your employment contract and may be a written or verbal agreement;
2. You were required to pay for expenses related to the work space in your home;
3. The expenses relate directly to your work during the period; and
4. Your work space is where you mainly work (more than 50% of the time) for a period of at least four consecutive weeks. Alternatively, this criteria may be met if you only use your work space to earn employment income and use it regularly and continually for meeting clients, customers or others while doing your work.

Determining your work space expenses

Whether you own or rent your home, the amount you can claim for the work space in your home must be apportioned on some reasonable basis, such as square footage of space used. For example, a reasonable apportionment could be the area of your work space at home divided by the total finished area of your home (including hallways, bathrooms and kitchen). The CRA has provided guidance on how to calculate the size of your work space. Please see the CRA website for more information.

As an example, assume you have a designated room in your house, such as an office or a spare room that you use only for work. If that room accounts for 20% of your home's total square footage, you can deduct 20% of the expenses related to your work space. This percentage also applies to the amount of rent you can deduct if you rent your home.

If you work in a common area, for example at a kitchen table that has other purposes besides your work, then you must calculate your employment use of that space. You can determine your employment use of the space by calculating the number of hours you use the space for work. For example, if you work 32 hours a week at the kitchen table, you can claim 19% (32 hours worked/168 total hours in a week) of the expenses relating to that space.

If you're the only one working in a particular space in your home, you can claim the whole employment use of that work space. However, if you and another family member share the work space (whether it's a designated area or a common work space) you will each have to calculate a portion of the employment use of the work space you are sharing.

Deduction limitations

If you worked only part of the year from home, you can only claim the expenses you paid in that part of the year. For example, let's say you worked from home from March 15 to May 31, 2020, due to the COVID-19 pandemic, but you went back to the office full-time in June. Due to COVID-19, you worked exclusively from home again in November and December. Assuming you meet all of the relevant criteria, you can claim the work space expenses you paid for those periods you worked exclusively from home, but you cannot claim the expenses you paid for the full year.

In addition, keep in mind that it's possible to deduct the expenses related to your home office only to the extent that they do not exceed your employment income for the year (as determined before deducting those expenses). In other words, you can't create or increase a loss for tax purposes by deducting home office expenses. Rather, you are able to carry forward any expenses in excess of your employment income and deduct them against your employment income (from the same employer) in a future year, provided you meet the relevant criteria in that year as well.

If you worked only part of the year from home, you can only claim the expenses you paid in that part of the year.

Expenses you may be able to claim

The following tables summarize some common home office supplies, work space expenses, as well as cell phone and internet expenses that are deductible, if you meet all of the relevant and respective criteria. For a more comprehensive list, please visit the CRA website.

Home office supplies

With respect to home office supplies, you can claim an item that's used up while directly performing your job. You can claim only the expense, or the portion of the expense, that you use for work.

Home office supplies

Item	Deductibility
Envelopes	Yes
Folders	Yes
Highlighters	Yes
Ink cartridges	Yes
Notebooks	Yes
Paper clips or binder clips	Yes
Pens or pencils	Yes
Printer paper	Yes
Specialty paper (i.e., graph paper)	Yes
Stamps or postage	Yes
Stationery items	Yes
Sticky notes	Yes
Toner	Yes
Supplies that are capital in nature (i.e., calculators, printers, desks, chairs lamps, etc.)	No
Lease of a cell phone, computer, laptop, tablet, fax machine, etc. that can reasonably relate to earning commission income	No for salaried employees Yes for commissioned employees

Work space expenses

Type of expense	Deductibility
Rent	Yes ¹
Utilities (electricity, heat, water)	Yes ²
Repairs and maintenance	Yes ³
Home insurance	No for salaried employees Yes for commissioned employees
Property taxes	No for salaried employees Yes for commissioned employees
Principal mortgage payments	No
Mortgage interest	No
Furniture	No
Capital expenses (replacing windows, flooring, furnace, etc.)	No
Wall decorations	No
Capital Cost Allowance	No

Cell phone and internet expenses

Type of expense	Deductibility
Basic cellular service plan (minutes/data)	Yes ⁴
Monthly basic home phone (landline) rate	No
Long distance telephone calls made for work (for cell phone and landline)	Yes
Home internet access fees	Yes ⁵
Home internet connection fees	No

Calculating your expenses

Under the detailed method, the calculation of home office expenses is quite complex. The CRA has created a calculator to help you determine the home office expenses deduction that you're entitled to.

Required forms

In order to claim a deduction for home office expenses, you're generally required to have a completed and signed CRA Form T2200 – Declaration of Conditions of Employment, from your employer. By signing the form, your employer is certifying that you are required to pay for your own expenses while carrying out your employment duties and that those expenses are not reimbursed by your employer.

To ease the administrative burden on employers for 2020, the CRA created a simplified Form T2200S – Declaration of Conditions of Employment for Working at Home Due to COVID-19. The T2200S is a simpler version of Form T2200. Your employer will need to complete this form to certify that you worked from home in 2020 due to the COVID-19 pandemic and were required to pay for some or all of your home office expenses during that period. In order to claim home office expenses under the detailed method in 2020, your employer will need to complete either of these forms.

¹ If you rent your home, you can claim a reasonable portion of the rent related to the work space. If you own your home, you cannot claim the rental value of the work space in your home.

² Includes utilities portion (electricity, heat and water) of your condominium fees.

³ You can claim the total amount of the expenses related to your work space only, if the amount paid is reasonable. For example, the cost of light bulbs, repainting your work space, or repairing walls or ceilings after installing phones or other office equipment you used in the work space. You can also claim the percentage of those expenses that relate to your work space, even if the maintenance or repair cost relates to other areas of the home. For example, minor repairs to your home furnace or air-conditioner or the purchase of household cleaning products.

⁴ The cost of the plan must be reasonable. The cost of the plan has been reasonably apportioned between employment and personal use. You must be able to show the cellular minutes or data you consumed directly while performing your employment duties (as well as the cost of the minutes or data).

⁵ The cost of the plan must be reasonable for federal tax purposes. Revenu Quebec has stated that internet fees can be deducted for Quebec tax purposes if they are billed according to use.

For 2020, the CRA will accept an electronic signature on the Form T2200S and Form T2200 to reduce the need for employees and employers to meet in person. Although you're not required to file these forms with your personal income tax return, you should keep a copy of them for at least six years, in addition to any receipts or supporting documents, in case the CRA asks to see them.

In order to make a claim for home office expenses, you will also need to complete Form T777 – Statement of Employment Expenses or Form T777S – Statement of Employment Expenses for Working at Home Due to COVID-19. Form T777S is a simpler version of Form T777. For more information on how to make the claim on your personal tax return, please refer to the CRA website.

For Quebec residents

If you live in Quebec, in addition to Form T2200S or T2200, you will also need to have your employer complete and sign Form TP-64.3-V – General Employment Conditions. Revenu Quebec also released an updated Form TP-64.3 to take into account circumstances where employees are required to incur expenses related to working remotely during the COVID-19 crisis. As a relief measure during the COVID-19 pandemic, Revenu Quebec will allow employers to complete and sign Form TP-64.3-V electronically and e-mail a copy to you. This form must be filed with your Quebec tax return for 2020.

In order to make a claim for home office expenses on your Quebec personal income tax return under the detailed method, you will need to complete Parts 1 and 3 of Form

TP-59.S-V – Expenses Related to Working Remotely Because of the COVID-19 Pandemic. If you incurred other types of employment expenses in addition to home office expenses, do not use form TP-59.S-V, rather use Form TP-59-V – Employment Expenses of Salaried Employees and Employees Who Earn Commissions.

An example comparing the temporary flat rate method and the detailed method

Craig is a salaried employee who has been working at home since April 1, 2020, because of COVID-19. He worked from home a total of 200 days from April 1, 2020, to December 31, 2020, excluding statutory holidays and summer vacation.

Craig incurred some expenses in order to work from home that his employer will not reimburse. He changed his internet package, which now costs $100 per month, and he bought $70 of office supplies (pens, paper and ink). He also bought $2,500 worth of furniture (desk and ergonomic chair) and office equipment (printer, calculator and stapler).

Craig designated a room in his home as his office and calculated that his office is 10% of the square footage of his home. He uses the office for work 100% of the time. His utility bill is $250 per month and his mortgage payments and property taxes total $2,400 per month.

Craig can make the calculations below to decide which method to use:

Eligible expenses	Temporary flat rate method	Detailed method
Home internet access fees	N/A	$$100 \times 9 \text{ months} \times 10\% = \90
Office supplies	N/A	$70
Utilities	N/A	$$250 \times 9 \text{ months} \times 10\% = \225
Total expenses	$200 \text{ days} \times $2 = \mathbf{$400}$	$385

Craig's furniture, office equipment, mortgage payments and property taxes are excluded from the calculation because they are not deductible.

Allowances and reimbursements

To assist you in working from home, your employer may have provided you with an allowance to cover home office expenses such as personal computer equipment or a headset. Or, perhaps your employer may have chosen to instead reimburse you for certain expenses you had to incur.

Generally, an allowance or reimbursement for items such as personal computer equipment will be considered a taxable benefit, and you will be required to include the amount in your income.

The CRA's view is that you have received an economic benefit when you are reimbursed, in whole or in part, for purchasing an asset that you get to keep, even if you use the asset for employment purposes. In addition, if you received an allowance to cover a portion of your home office expenses, it will generally be considered a taxable benefit regardless of whether you can deduct home office expenses.

However, the CRA recognizes that, due to COVID-19, many employees have needed to purchase computer equipment as well as home office furniture, such as desks and chairs, in order to work from home. Consequently, the CRA recently confirmed that a reimbursement of up to $500 for the cost of acquiring personal computer equipment and home office furniture that has enabled you to immediately and properly perform your employment duties will not be a taxable benefit, as the items are mainly for the benefit of your employer. You will need to keep receipts in order to provide supporting documentation.

Keep in mind that you cannot claim a deduction for any expenses that were or will be reimbursed by your employer.

Conclusion

As a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, you may have started working from home for the first time in 2020 and therefore may not be familiar with the rules for deducting home office expenses. Given the latest CRA and Revenu Quebec guidance, it's important to speak with a qualified tax advisor to determine whether you can claim home office expenses and if you can, which method is best for you.

This article may contain strategies, not all of which will apply to your particular financial circumstances. The information in this article is not intended to provide legal, tax or insurance advice. To ensure that your own circumstances have been properly considered and that action is taken based on the latest information available, you should obtain professional advice from a qualified tax, legal and/or insurance advisor before acting on any of the information in this article.

Wealth
Management

This document has been prepared for use by the RBC Wealth Management member companies, RBC Dominion Securities Inc. (RBC DS)*, RBC Phillips, Hager & North Investment Counsel Inc. (RBC PH&N IC), RBC Global Asset Management Inc. (RBC GAM), Royal Trust Corporation of Canada and The Royal Trust Company (collectively, the "Companies") and their affiliates, RBC Direct Investing Inc. (RBC DI) *, RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc. (RBC WMFS) and Royal Mutual Funds Inc. (RMFI). *Member-Canadian Investor Protection Fund. Each of the Companies, their affiliates and the Royal Bank of Canada are separate corporate entities which are affiliated. "RBC advisor" refers to Private Bankers who are employees of Royal Bank of Canada and mutual fund representatives of RMFI, Investment Counsellors who are employees of RBC PH&N IC, Senior Trust Advisors and Trust Officers who are employees of The Royal Trust Company or Royal Trust Corporation of Canada, or Investment Advisors who are employees of RBC DS. In Quebec, financial planning services are provided by RMFI or RBC WMFS and each is licensed as a financial services firm in that province. In the rest of Canada, financial planning services are available through RMFI, Royal Trust Corporation of Canada, The Royal Trust Company, or RBC DS. Estate and trust services are provided by Royal Trust Corporation of Canada and The Royal Trust Company. If specific products or services are not offered by one of the Companies or RMFI, clients may request a referral to another RBC partner. Insurance products are offered through RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc., a subsidiary of RBC Dominion Securities Inc. When providing life insurance products in all provinces except Quebec, Investment Advisors are acting as Insurance Representatives of RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc. In Quebec, Investment Advisors are acting as Financial Security Advisors of RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc. RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc. is licensed as a financial services firm in the province of Quebec. The strategies, advice and technical content in this publication are provided for the general guidance and benefit of our clients, based on information believed to be accurate and complete, but we cannot guarantee its accuracy or completeness. This publication is not intended as nor does it constitute tax or legal advice. Readers should consult a qualified legal, tax or other professional advisor when planning to implement a strategy. This will ensure that their individual circumstances have been considered properly and that action is taken on the latest available information. Interest rates, market conditions, tax rules, and other investment factors are subject to change. This information is not investment advice and should only be used in conjunction with a discussion with your RBC advisor. None of the Companies, RMFI, RBC WMFS, RBC DI, Royal Bank of Canada or any of its affiliates or any other person accepts any liability whatsoever for any direct or consequential loss arising from any use of this report or the information contained herein. ®/™ Registered trademarks of Royal Bank of Canada. Used under licence. © 2020 Royal Bank of Canada. All rights reserved. NAV0288 (12/20)