Tax planning checklist for students

If you are a student or are considering a return to school, you may wish to take advantage of all the tax credits and deductions available to you as a student. This checklist provides a useful quick reference for the most common federal tax credits, deductions, and tax-assisted programs available to students. Please note that different rules may apply if you are studying in Canada as an international student, or if you are enrolled at a foreign educational institution outside of Canada. Any reference to a “spouse” in this article also refers to a common-law partner.

The content in this article is for information purposes only and is not intended to provide legal or tax advice. To ensure that your own circumstances have been properly considered and that action is taken based on the latest information available, you should obtain professional advice from a qualified tax advisor before acting on any of the information in this article.

Tuition amount

You may be eligible to claim a 15% non-refundable credit for tuition fees you paid. Generally, fees for a course qualify if the course was at the post-secondary level, or, for individuals 16 years of age or older at the end of the year, it develops or improves skills in an occupation and the educational institution has been certified by Employment and Social Development Canada (ESDC). You may also be able to claim the credit for courses you take outside Canada if you paid them to a university or other educational institution for your full-time enrollment in a course that is at least three consecutive weeks long and leads to a degree.

The tuition fees you paid to each educational institution in the year must be more than $100 in order for you to claim the credit. Eligible tuition fees include admission fees, charges for the use of library or laboratory facilities, exemption fees, and examination fees that are integral to the program. Other common fees include application fees (but only if you subsequently enroll in the institution), confirmation fees, charges for a certificate, diploma or degree, mandatory computer service fees, and academic fees.

Transfer or carry forward of unused tuition and other amounts

You must first claim your tuition credit on your own tax return to reduce your taxes payable to zero for that particular year. If you have any unused credits available, you may choose to either transfer or carry forward the amounts. You can transfer the unused credits to your spouse or to your or your spouse's parent or grandparent. The maximum amount you can transfer is $5,000, less the amount you used to reduce your own taxes payable. You can carry forward the unused credits to future years in which you have taxes payable.

Prior to 2017 there was an education credit as well as a textbook credit that you could have claimed on your personal income tax return. If you were unable to use the entire credit in prior years, you will still be able to carry forward any unused education or textbook credits to 2017 and subsequent taxation years.

Interest paid on student loans

You can claim a 15% non-refundable tax credit for interest you paid on loans made under the Canada Student Loans Act, the Canada Student Financial Assistance Act, the Apprentice Loans Act, or similar provincial or territorial laws for post-secondary education.

You cannot claim this credit for interest paid on any other kind of loan or on a student loan that you combined with another kind of loan. You can also not claim interest paid on a new loan if you renegotiated your student loan with a bank or financial institution. For example, if your existing student loan carries a 5% interest rate, you cannot claim the interest paid on a new loan (presumably at a lower interest rate) that you use to pay off your existing loan. To determine which option is more beneficial for you, compare the tax savings resulting from this tax credit to the savings you could achieve with a lower interest loan.

To the extent that you cannot (because you have insufficient taxes to utilize the credit) or choose not to claim the interest paid in the year you incurred it, you can carry the interest forward and claim it in any of the five subsequent taxation years. This credit cannot be transferred to another person.

Scholarships, fellowships, bursaries and study grants

If you are a qualifying student in respect of your specific program, you may be able to receive annual scholarships, fellowships, bursaries, and certain awards tax-free. If you are not a qualifying student, the first $500 of the post-secondary awards you receive in a year is usually tax-free and the remainder is taxable. Post-doctoral fellowships are generally taxable.

If you moved to be at least 40 kilometres closer to your new school or place of work, you may be able to deduct moving expenses.

Research grants

A research grant allows you to carry on research or any similar work for the purpose of discovering new facts or developing knowledge. If you receive a research grant, you only have to include in income the portion that exceeds your allowable expenses. Allowable expenses include expenses for traveling, including meals and lodging while you are traveling, fees paid to assistants, the cost of equipment and supplies, and laboratory fees and charges. Allowable expenses do not include personal or living expenses or expenses for which you have been reimbursed. You cannot use your allowable expenses to reduce your other types of income.

Moving expenses

If you moved to be at least 40 kilometres closer to your new school or place of work, you may be able to deduct moving expenses. If you moved to be a full-time student in a post-secondary program at a university, college or other educational institution, you can deduct your moving expenses from certain eligible income. Eligible income is the part of your scholarships, fellowships, bursaries, and study grants that are taxable. If your moving expenses are more than the eligible income you report for the year, you can carry forward the unused expenses and deduct them against future eligible income.

If you moved to work, including summer employment, you can deduct your moving expenses from the employment income you earned at your new work location. If you moved as a co-operative student, you can deduct the moving expenses you incur at the beginning of each academic period when you move back after a summer break or a work semester, provided you meet the 40-kilometre requirement each time. If your moving expenses are reimbursed by your employer, you can only claim a deduction for your moving expenses if you include the reimbursement in income. If the reimbursement is not included in your income but your employer only partially reimbursed your moving expenses, you can still deduct the moving expenses you incurred in excess of the amount you received.

Child care expenses

You may be entitled to deduct child care expenses that you or another person (usually your spouse or your child's parent) paid to have someone look after your child while you attended school. For example, payments made to caregivers, day nursery schools and daycare centres, and education institutions (for the part of the fees that relate to child care services) qualify for the deduction. The child must have lived with you or the other person that paid for the expenses when the expenses were incurred. Your child must have been under 16 years of age or had a mental or physical impairment in order to qualify for this deduction. The person with the lower net income must generally claim the child care expenses.

Lifelong Learning Plan (LLP)

If you are a resident of Canada, you may be able to withdraw up to $10,000 per year, to an overall limit of $20,000 over a qualifying period, from your RRSP to finance full-time training or post-secondary education for yourself or your spouse. You can participate in the LLP as many times as you would like. However, you must first bring your LLP balance to zero before you can withdraw up to $20,000 again. The amounts you withdraw under the LLP do not have to be included in your income. However, you must repay these borrowed amounts in instalments over a maximum of 10 years. If you do not make the instalment payments, the required repayment amount for the year will be taxable income.

Registered Education Savings Plan (RESP) amounts

Original contributions to an RESP can be withdrawn at any time and are not taxable if paid to the subscriber or to you, the beneficiary of an RESP. An Educational Assistance Payment (EAP) is a payment of the income and government grants that have accumulated in the RESP over time and can also be paid to you, as a beneficiary of an RESP. An EAP is taxable income and will need to be reported on your tax return in the year you receive it.

Goods and Services Tax (GST) / Harmonized Sales Tax (HST) credit

The GST/HST credit is a tax-free quarterly payment that aims to help you offset all or part of the GST/HST you pay, provided you have a low or modest income and are a resident of Canada. You also have to be at least 19 years of age, have (or previously had) a spouse, or be a parent who lives with your child (or previously were a parent who lived with your child). The Canada Revenue Agency automatically determines your eligibility for the GST/HST credit when you file your tax return.

You may be entitled to deduct child care expenses that you or another person (usually your spouse or your child's parent) paid to have someone look after your child while you attended school.

Public transit amount

You may be able to claim a 15% non-refundable tax credit for the cost of certain public transit passes that are for the use of public transit for the period January 1, 2017 to June 30, 2017 on your 2017 personal income tax return. Generally, monthly passes or passes of longer duration qualify for this credit. The passes must be used by you, your spouse or your children (or children of your spouse) who are under 19 years old. You can only claim the amount for which you have not been reimbursed. If you were reimbursed, you can only claim the amount if the reimbursement was reported in your income. You should keep your receipts and passes as proof of purchase to substantiate your claim for this tax credit.

This federal tax credit has been eliminated for the use of public transit services after June 2017. Even if you paid an amount before July 1, 2017 you can only claim the cost pertaining to the portion that is for transit services for the period January 1 to June 30, 2017. For example, if you paid for an annual pass in January 2017, you will have to prorate your cost to determine the amount paid that relates to services during the period January 1 to June 30, 2017.

Canada employment amount

If you earn employment income, for example from a co-operative position, you can claim this 15% non-refundable tax credit. This credit is provided to recognize that you might have work-related expenses that you need to incur such as purchasing a home computer, uniform or supplies. You cannot claim this amount if you are self-employed.

Final thoughts

It may be to your advantage to file an income tax return, even if you have no income for the year, in order to either transfer or carry forward certain credits or to receive the GST/HST credit. If you have any questions or require clarification of any of the points discussed in this article, be sure to contact your qualified tax advisor.
