

Wealth
Management

the Navigator

INVESTMENT, TAX AND LIFESTYLE PERSPECTIVES FROM RBC WEALTH MANAGEMENT SERVICES

Weatherill Wealth of RBC Dominion Securities
4900 - 50th Street, Suite 300
Red Deer, AB T4N 1X7
www.bradweatherill.ca

Brad Weatherill, CIM
Senior Wealth Advisor
Tel: 403-341-8868
brad.weatherill@rbc.com

Sue Senio
Associate Wealth & Investment
Advisor
Tel: 403-341-7400
susan.senio@rbc.com

Trent Nicolay, CFP, BComm
Associate Wealth Advisor
Tel: 403-341-8872
trent.nicolay@rbc.com

Nathan Dyck, BBA
Associate
Tel: 403-341-7225
nathan.dyck@rbc.com

Shauna Gaume
Client Experience Associate
Tel: 403-341-8854
shauna.gaume@rbc.com

Theron Gustafson, BComm
Administrative Assistant
Tel: 403-340-7303
theron.gustafson@gmail.com

RRSP over-contributions

The tax implications and your options

You can contribute to your RRSP or your spouse's RRSP and claim a deduction for your contribution against your taxable income. If you contribute more than your RRSP deduction limit, you will have an over-contribution. You are allowed to make a $2,000 over-contribution to your RRSP without incurring a tax. If you have an RRSP over-contribution above the $2,000 limit (referred to as an "excess contribution"), you will be subject to a tax equal to 1% per month on the excess contribution. This article discusses the tax implications of your over-contribution as well as alternative methods for withdrawing it from your RRSP.

Any reference to a spouse in this article also includes a common-law partner.

Tax consequences of an excess contribution

If you made an over-contribution to your RRSP or your spouse's RRSP in excess of $2,000, you are subject to a tax of 1% per month starting from the month you first exceeded your contribution limit by more than $2,000. The tax will continue to apply until the month before you remove the excess or until new contribution room is available to you, sufficient enough to absorb the excess contribution. New contribution room may become available on January 1st of the following year.

To calculate the 1% tax you owe on the excess, you must complete a T1-OVP return. Since this return is quite complex, you may wish to complete it with the assistance of a qualified tax advisor. You must file the T1-OVP return and pay the tax no later than 90 days after the end of the year in which you had the excess contribution.

If you miss the deadline for filing the T1-OVP return, the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) will charge you a late filing penalty. The late filing penalty is 5% of your balance owing, plus 1% of your balance owing for each month the T1-OVP return is late, to a maximum of 12 months. In addition, the CRA will charge you compound daily interest starting on the day after your return is due on any unpaid amounts that you owe, including the late filing penalty.

Withdrawing an over-contribution

Normally, any withdrawals from your RRSP are included in your income and subject to tax at your marginal tax rate. However, you can withdraw an over-contribution from your RRSP and the income inclusion may be offset by a deduction (so that no income tax is payable) if you make the withdrawal in any of the following years:

- The year in which you made the contribution or the following year; or
- The year in which you are sent a Notice of Assessment or Notice of Reassessment for your T1 income tax and benefit return for the year in which you made the contribution, or the following year.

In addition, to claim the deduction (and have no income tax payable on the withdrawal), you must either:

- Have reasonably expected to be able to deduct the contribution for the year you made it or the immediately previous year; or
- Not have made the contribution with the intention of withdrawing it and deducting an offsetting amount.

Two options for withdrawing an over-contribution

You have two options for withdrawing an over-contribution from your RRSP:

1. Withdraw with withholding tax

When you withdraw an over-contribution from your RRSP, withholding tax will be applied to your withdrawal. The withdrawal must be reported as income on your tax return in the year you withdrew the contribution. However, if the necessary criteria previously discussed are met, you can complete Form T746 when you file your income tax return to claim a deduction for the withdrawal so that no income tax is payable. The taxes withheld on the RRSP withdrawal can either be used to reduce your other taxes owing at the time of filing your income tax return or refunded to you if you owe no other taxes.

2. Withdraw without withholding tax

If you meet all of the necessary criteria for the deduction and have not already withdrawn the over-contribution from your RRSP, you can withdraw it without having tax withheld. To do this, you can complete Form T3012A and have it approved by the CRA. If the CRA approves your completed form, you can withdraw the over-contribution with no withholding tax applied by providing the form to your financial institution at the time of withdrawal.

The 1% tax will continue to apply until you withdraw the excess contribution from your RRSP.

The 1% tax will continue to apply until you withdraw the excess contribution from your RRSP. If there is a delay in getting the form approved, the tax will continue to apply until the month before you remove the excess.

This alternative simply avoids the withholding tax at source if the CRA approves Form T3012A. Regardless of the withholding tax exemption, the withdrawal is still considered income that must be reported for tax purposes. However, you can claim an offsetting deduction for the over-contribution withdrawn on line 23200 of your income tax return so that no tax is owing.

Withdrawing from a spousal RRSP

If you made an over-contribution to your spouse's RRSP, the excess needs to be removed for the 1% tax to stop applying. You can reduce the over-contribution by withdrawing it from either your own RRSP or have your spouse withdraw the over-contribution from their spousal RRSP. If your spouse withdraws the over-contribution, the withdrawal will generally be included in your spouse's income. However, if you contributed to the spousal RRSP in the year of the withdrawal or in either of the two immediately preceding years, the income will attribute back to you. In this case, an offsetting deduction for the income inclusion may be available to you, so long as the withdrawal is included in your income and the other conditions previously mentioned have been met. The taxes withheld on the withdrawal from your spouse's RRSP will not attribute back to you even if the income does.

Withdrawing from a RRIF

If you made an over-contribution to your RRSP, the 1% tax will continue to apply on the excess contribution even after your RRSP has been converted to a RRIF. You will need to complete and file the T1-OVP return by the appropriate deadline and pay any tax owing.

The 1% tax will continue to apply each month there is an excess contribution remaining in your RRIF at the end of that month. Any withdrawal from your RRIF will be considered a withdrawal of an excess RRSP contribution for the purpose of applying the 1% tax. Note that you cannot use Form T3012A for withdrawing an RRSP over-contribution that was transferred to your RRIF. Your financial institution is required to withhold tax on any RRIF withdrawal above the minimum payment required for the year.

If you could not deduct the RRSP over-contribution before converting to a RRIF or you will not earn any more RRSP contribution room to absorb the over-contribution, you may still be able to claim a deduction for this contribution when you withdraw it from your RRIF. To claim a deduction (using Form T746) for the over-contribution withdrawn, in addition to meeting the criteria previously discussed, you will need to remove the over-contribution by taking a withdrawal greater than your RRIF minimum amount for the year. If you are not able to claim a deduction for the over-contribution, you will be taxed twice on this amount. This is because you were denied a deduction when you first contributed the funds to your RRSP, and you will pay tax on the receipt of the funds when you withdraw them from your RRIF.

An alternative to withdrawing the over-contribution

Instead of withdrawing the over-contribution from your or your spouse's RRSP or RRIF, you can wait until January 1st of the following year if you expect new RRSP deduction room to be created. If you decide to wait until your over-contribution can be absorbed, the 1% tax will continue to apply on the excess contribution for each month, for the remainder of the year and you will be required to file a T1-OVP return. The over-contributed amount in the current year is carried forward and effectively is an unused RRSP contribution for the following year. An unused RRSP contribution is a contribution that was made to your RRSP but not claimed as a deduction on your T1 return yet.

This alternative may be appropriate, particularly if you made the over-contribution late in the year or you do not discover the over-contribution until the following year and you have already earned new RRSP deduction room.

More on unused RRSP contributions

What if you made an RRSP contribution because you had sufficient contribution room, and then your circumstances change making it tax-inefficient to deduct the RRSP contribution? For example, let's say your bonus is paid in January of the following year and it was transferred directly to your RRSP because you have contribution room. That same January you are forced to go on long-term disability and your only other income that year is non-taxable disability income. Your tax credits are sufficient to offset any taxes on your bonus. In this case you would not claim an RRSP deduction on your income tax return for the year and your contribution is an unused RRSP contribution. Because it is not an over-contribution, you will not incur the 1% tax. If you don't foresee your financial situation changing in the future and you think you may never be able to deduct your unused RRSP contribution, then it may make sense to withdraw it before the window expires for withdrawing it from your RRSP without incurring tax on the withdrawal. This is because if you never get to claim a deduction on your income tax return for the RRSP contribution and then you pay tax on the amount when you eventually withdraw it, you will essentially be double-taxed. This is an extreme example of where an unused RRSP contribution that is not an over-contribution can arise but there are other instances where this may arise.

If you made an over-contribution to your RRSP, the 1% tax will continue to apply on the excess contribution even after your RRSP has been converted to a RRIF.

The procedures for removing an unused RRSP contribution are the same as removing an over-contribution and the same rules apply in terms of the time limit for removal without incurring tax on the withdrawal and the other conditions as discussed in the section on "Withdrawing an over-contribution".

Conclusion

If you think you may have over-contributed to your RRSP, it is important to seek advice from a qualified tax advisor to determine the next steps that are most appropriate for you.

This article may contain strategies, not all of which will apply to your particular financial circumstances. The information in this article is not intended to provide legal, tax, or insurance advice. To ensure that your own circumstances have been properly considered and that action is taken based on the latest information available, you should obtain professional advice from a qualified tax, legal, and/or insurance advisor before acting on any of the information in this article.

Wealth
Management

---

This document has been prepared for use by the RBC Wealth Management member companies, RBC Dominion Securities Inc. (RBC DS)*, RBC Phillips, Hager & North Investment Counsel Inc. (RBC PH&N IC), RBC Global Asset Management Inc. (RBC GAM), Royal Trust Corporation of Canada and The Royal Trust Company (collectively, the "Companies") and their affiliates, RBC Direct Investing Inc. (RBC DI) *, RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc. (RBC WMFS) and Royal Mutual Funds Inc. (RMFI). *Member-Canadian Investor Protection Fund. Each of the Companies, their affiliates and the Royal Bank of Canada are separate corporate entities which are affiliated. "RBC advisor" refers to Private Bankers who are employees of Royal Bank of Canada and mutual fund representatives of RMFI, Investment Counsellors who are employees of RBC PH&N IC, Senior Trust Advisors and Trust Officers who are employees of The Royal Trust Company or Royal Trust Corporation of Canada, or Investment Advisors who are employees of RBC DS. In Quebec, financial planning services are provided by RMFI or RBC WMFS and each is licensed as a financial services firm in that province. In the rest of Canada, financial planning services are available through RMFI, Royal Trust Corporation of Canada, The Royal Trust Company, or RBC DS. Estate and trust services are provided by Royal Trust Corporation of Canada and The Royal Trust Company. If specific products or services are not offered by one of the Companies or RMFI, clients may request a referral to another RBC partner. Insurance products are offered through RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc., a subsidiary of RBC Dominion Securities Inc. When providing life insurance products in all provinces except Quebec, Investment Advisors are acting as Insurance Representatives of RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc. In Quebec, Investment Advisors are acting as Financial Security Advisors of RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc. RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc. is licensed as a financial services firm in the province of Quebec. The strategies, advice and technical content in this publication are provided for the general guidance and benefit of our clients, based on information believed to be accurate and complete, but we cannot guarantee its accuracy or completeness. This publication is not intended as nor does it constitute tax or legal advice. Readers should consult a qualified legal, tax or other professional advisor when planning to implement a strategy. This will ensure that their individual circumstances have been considered properly and that action is taken on the latest available information. Interest rates, market conditions, tax rules, and other investment factors are subject to change. This information is not investment advice and should only be used in conjunction with a discussion with your RBC advisor. None of the Companies, RMFI, RBC WMFS, RBC DI, Royal Bank of Canada or any of its affiliates or any other person accepts any liability whatsoever for any direct or consequential loss arising from any use of this report or the information contained herein. ®/™ Registered trademarks of Royal Bank of Canada. Used under licence. © 2020 Royal Bank of Canada. All rights reserved. NAV0117 (02/20)