

Wealth Management
Dominion Securities

the Navigator

INVESTMENT, TAX AND LIFESTYLE PERSPECTIVES FROM RBC WEALTH MANAGEMENT SERVICES

Heather Lagasse
Senior Portfolio Manager
& Wealth Advisor
Tel: 604-981-2340
heather.lagasse@rbc.com

Oscar Davidson
Associate
Tel: 778-338-8930
oscar.davidson@rbc.com

Lagasse Wealth Management of RBC Dominion Securities
1300 Marine Drive, 2nd Floor
West Vancouver, BC V7T 1B5
Tel: 604-981-2340
Toll free: 1 800-375-0585
www.heatherlagasse.com

Joint ownership accounts

Key considerations and understanding your options
at RBC Dominion Securities

As part of the estate planning process, individuals will often consider establishing a joint account with one or more of their adult children or other family members. Sometimes, this is done as a tool for expediency so that a joint account holder can help to manage the account, or to make the assets immediately available to the surviving accountholder(s) upon the death of the first joint accountholder. In other cases, a joint account is a planning technique used as part of a strategy recommended by an individual's legal and tax advisors to seek to minimize probate tax. Whatever the motivation behind the account, before you open a joint account, it is important to be aware of the different joint account types available at RBC Dominion Securities Inc., how these different joint account types operate, and the resulting potential benefits and considerations for each joint account type. It is also important to consider how a joint account fits into your overall holistic estate plan. There may be other estate planning tools that are more appropriate in light of your current or future estate plans.

Any reference to a spouse in this article also includes a common-law partner.

Joint tenancy vs tenancy in common

There are generally two forms of shared ownership which allow for two or more people to own an asset together: Tenancy In Common and Joint Tenancy.

Tenancy in common

The term "tenancy in common" is used to describe the ownership of an asset by two or more individuals together, but without the right of survivorship. Each accountholder is entitled to a defined, possibly unequal, portion of the account in question. Co-owners in a tenancy in common arrangement can own equal or unequal interests in an asset. Upon the death of one of the accountholders, his/her interest will not pass to the surviving accountholder(s), but will form part of the estate of the deceased accountholder and will be distributed in accordance with his/her Will. If the deceased did not have a Will then the provincial or territorial intestacy laws will dictate how the assets of the deceased will be distributed.

Joint tenancy

Joint tenancy allows two or more people to own an asset together. Each joint account holder generally has an equal undivided interest in the account. Where the joint tenancy is between spouses, upon the death of one spouse, the deceased's ownership interest in the account automatically passes to the surviving spouse. By passing directly to the surviving spouse, the account does not form part of the deceased spouse's estate and thus would generally not be subject to probate fees.

Where the joint tenancy is between a parent and adult children, upon the death of the parent, the account may be considered to form part of the deceased parent's estate. The adult children are required to demonstrate that the parent intended to gift the account and its assets to them, as opposed to having added the children to the account for the purpose of ease of account administration. Where the adult children so demonstrate, the account will generally pass to them as surviving joint tenants. Otherwise the account forms part of the deceased parent's estate and may be subject to probate. The following is a non-exhaustive list of the matters which may assist in determining the parent's intention:

- What was said and done by the parties before or at the time of the transfer or immediately after it.
- The language used in any bank or financial institution documents pertaining to the account.
- Control and use of the funds in the accounts during the parent's lifetime.
- The tax treatment of the joint account. Was the income and capital gains generated by the investments in the account reported solely by the parent or by all joint account holders?
- Evidence of the parent's intention to gift the account to the children.

Types of joint tenancy accounts available at RBC Dominion Securities

Please note the following accounts are not available to residents of Quebec. A Quebec resident is not permitted to be an account holder or successor account holder of the following types of account.

There are two types of joint tenancy accounts available at RBC Dominion Securities: Joint Tenants with Right of Survivorship (JTWROS) and Joint – Gift of Beneficial Right of Survivorship (JGBRS).

Joint tenancy allows two or more people to own an asset together. Each joint account holder generally has an equal undivided interest in the account.

Joint Tenants with Right of Survivorship (JTWROS)

By opening an RBC Dominion Securities JTWROS account and agreeing to the terms of the client account agreement, it is assumed by RBC Dominion Securities that all joint account holders have both legal and beneficial ownership of the account. What this means is that not only are the account holders the registered legal owners of the account, but all joint account holders have beneficial ownership of the account, including the assets of the account, as soon as the account is opened. On the death of one of the joint account holders, the JTWROS account will be treated in accordance with the applicable client account agreement and account opening forms and the name of the deceased will be removed from the account so that the JTWROS is subsequently held in the name(s) of the surviving joint account holder(s) without requesting probate. Although RBC Dominion Securities will generally not require probate as described above, these assets may need to be included in an application for probate should the executor of the deceased account holder apply for probate or should a third party make a claim upon the assets of the account. It is important you discuss this matter with a qualified legal advisor before opening a JTWROS account.

Joint – Gift of Beneficial Right of Survivorship (JGBRS)

RBC Dominion Securities JGBRS is a joint account which facilitates the retention by the primary account holder of legal and beneficial ownership of the account, including the assets of the account, during his/her lifetime, while gifting the beneficial entitlement to the right of survivorship in the account to any friends and family members named as successor account holder(s). The terms of the RBC Dominion Securities client account agreements governing the JGBRS account expressly state that the intention of the account holder at the time of account opening is to make an inter-vivos gift, at the time of the account opening, the beneficial entitlement to the right of survivorship in the account. Neither the account nor the assets therein are gifted at the time of account opening. This means that the successor account holder(s) does not have any entitlement to or control over the account or its assets until the death of the primary account holder. The successor account holder(s) is not permitted to provide any instructions in relation to the account while the account holder is alive or to withdraw funds from the account. Accordingly, the accountholder retains sole control of the account during his/her lifetime.

On the death of the accountholder, the JGBRS account will be treated in accordance with the applicable client account agreement and account opening forms and the name of the deceased will be removed from the account so that the JGBRS is subsequently held in the name of the successor accountholder(s) without requesting probate. Although RBC Dominion Securities does not require probate to allow the assets to pass to the successor accountholder(s), these assets may need to be included in an application for probate should the executor of the deceased accountholder apply for probate or should a third party make a claim to the assets in the account. It is important that you discuss this matter with a qualified legal advisor before opening a JGBRS account.

Comparing the joint account options at RBC Dominion Securities

For a comparison of the joint ownership accounts available at RBC Dominion Securities, please refer to the Appendix to this article. The Appendix highlights some of attributes of the different types of joint ownership accounts including probate considerations as well as taxes on account opening and death. We recommend you discuss these features with an independent, qualified legal advisor who may assist you in determining which account, if any, may be suitable in meeting your estate planning and financial objectives.

Key considerations before transferring assets into a joint account

Ability for the deceased accountholder's estate to pay taxes at death

Consider the potential tax implications of the following example:

Mr. X owns a non-registered investment account with a fair market value of $2MM, a house worth $400K and an RRSP valued at $1MM. He has designated his wife as the beneficiary of his RRSP. Mr. X opens a JGBRS account and transfers his non-registered investment account to a JGBRS account naming his 3 daughters as Successor Accountholders. Upon his death, his 3 daughters receive the assets in the JGBRS outright. However, a $750K tax liability is triggered on the deemed disposition of the assets in the JGBRS account that is payable by Mr. X's estate. As the bulk of Mr. X's assets did not fall into his estate (only the $400K house formed part of the estate), there would be insufficient assets in his estate to pay the taxes owing. The executor of the estate would be faced with a liquidity issue and a potentially bankrupt estate.

For a comparison of the joint ownership accounts available at RBC Dominion Securities, please refer to the Appendix to this article. The Appendix highlights some of attributes of the different types of joint ownership accounts including probate considerations as well as taxes on account opening and death.

Lack of flexibility in making gifts and potential unintended consequences

There is no limit to the number of joint potential accountholders (JTWROS account) or successor accountholders (JGBRS account). However, the surviving joint accountholders may only receive the assets in the account in equal shares. There is no ability to specify the percentage share received by each surviving joint accountholder, which would limit your ability (as the accountholder) to gift assets to friends and family in differing proportions. Furthermore, any funds held in a JTWROS account or a JGBRS account would likely be unavailable to fund charitable bequests set out in your Will as the assets generally pass outright to the surviving joint accountholder(s) and do not form part of your estate.

Both the JTWROS and JGBRS accounts only benefit joint accountholders that are living at the time of your death, leaving no entitlement to the heirs of a joint accountholder who has died before you. The assets in the JTWROS and JGBRS account will pass to the joint accountholder(s) alive at the time of your death in equal shares. There is no ability to name contingent beneficiaries in the event a joint accountholder predeceases you. This may be avoided by leaving the assets in your sole name and having the assets pass through your estate and distributed in accordance with your Will.

In the case of the JGBRS account, where the successor accountholder predeceases you, you could change the distribution by withdrawing the assets of the account, closing the account and opening a new JGBRS account with newly named successor accountholders. Note that changes to an account will not be possible where you are deemed to no longer have mental capacity. Moreover an attorney appointed pursuant to an enduring power of attorney is not permitted to make changes to a joint account.

In the event there are no surviving successor accountholders following your death, your assets would form part of your estate and will be distributed in accordance with your Will.

Alternative estate planning vehicles and other strategies to consider

There may be estate planning vehicles or strategies other than a joint account that are more appropriate in light of your current or future estate planning objectives. Such vehicles and strategies may include, creating an alter ego trust or joint partner trust, setting up a testamentary trust in your Will or making an outright gift to adult children, or being the donor of a Power of Attorney.

Alter ego trust or joint partner trust

An alter ego trust (or a joint partner trust, if you wish to include your spouse as a beneficiary of this trust) is an inter vivos trust created by you when you are aged 65 or older. The terms of the trust must provide that you (or your spouse in the case of a joint partner trust) are entitled to receive the income of the trust while alive and that no other person other than you (or your spouse) can receive or use the income or capital of the trust during your (or your spouse's) lifetime. One of the benefits of creating this trust is that you can generally transfer your capital property into this trust on a tax deferred basis. Any taxes on the accrued gains on the property transferred to the trust will be deferred until the property is subsequently sold or you (or your spouse in the case of a joint partner trust) die. This differs from the normal tax treatment when assets are transferred to an inter vivos trust, where you are immediately deemed to have disposed of your property at fair market value.

Another benefit to creating an alter ego or joint partner trust is that the assets placed in the trust will generally not form part of your (or your spouse's) estate on death and will not be subject to probate taxes. The terms of the trust document will determine how your assets are distributed after your (or your spouse's) death.

There are considerations relating to these types of trusts, such as the set up and administration costs, as well as the complexity of administering these trusts. You can choose to name RBC Estate & Trust Services as sole trustee, co-trustee, agent for trustee or successor trustee. This provides the benefit of professional advice and administrative support when dealing with potentially complex family dynamics. Before transferring your assets to an alter ego trust or joint partner trust, you are advised to consult with a qualified legal and tax advisor.

Testamentary trust

A testamentary trust is a trust created by your Will which comes into effect on your death. It is generally funded with assets that form part of your estate. A testamentary trust is an alternative to a direct or outright distribution of estate assets. It provides a means of transferring your assets to your intended beneficiaries, while allowing you to control the timing and distribution of the assets to them. The assets held in the trust are invested and managed by the trustee of the trust, who distributes the income and capital to the beneficiaries in accordance with your wishes stated in your Will. A testamentary trust also may assist with respect to potential claims of your beneficiaries' creditors. You are advised to speak to your legal advisor in relation to this matter, as well as any matter relating to testamentary trusts.

There may be estate planning vehicles or strategies other than a joint account that are more appropriate in light of your current or future estate planning objectives. Such vehicles and strategies may include, creating an alter ego trust or joint partner trust, setting up a testamentary trust in your Will or making an outright gift to adult children, or being the donor of a Power of Attorney.

You may wish to consider a testamentary trust if you have concerns about your children's ability to manage finances or if you wish to provide a lasting legacy to your children, grandchildren and great grandchildren.

Outright gift

You may wish to consider a gift of assets outright to your adult children during your lifetime if you will not need the assets to support your living expenses. In this case, the gifted assets will generally not be included in the calculation of probate fees on your death. This strategy may suit your needs if you are comfortable giving up control of the assets and placing them in the control of your adult children. This also may appeal to you if you would like the next generation to benefit from your gift during your lifetime and you are comfortable that your adult children will manage the funds appropriately. There could, however, be tax and other consequences for you when you transfer the assets to your children so you are advised to obtain professional legal and tax advice before proceeding with this strategy.

Granting a Power of Attorney or a trading authority

If your intention in creating a joint account is to make it convenient for an adult child to manage your property, consider giving your adult child a Power of Attorney, which will allow your adult child to deal with the assets of your account for your benefit during your lifetime. Thereafter the assets of the account will form part of your estate. This will give you some certainty that on your death the assets in the account will go to your heirs in accordance with your wishes expressed in your Will. Another way to allow an adult child to assist you in managing your account is to grant trading authority (a form of limited power of attorney) over the assets in that account. This authority will not affect the way in which assets pass on your death, or your ability to continue to manage your assets during your lifetime. It will, however, enable your adult child, or any other person you choose to appoint, to make trading decisions on your behalf, within the parameters of the trading authority, which you have defined and granted. Your advisor will be able to discuss the types of authority available and the powers the different authorities can provide.

Choosing the right option for you

Should you choose to proceed with a joint account, it is important that you ensure that the account attributes align with your current and future estate planning objectives. To ensure that your circumstances have been properly considered, you are advised to obtain professional advice from a qualified legal advisor. As part of any estate planning process, it is also important to prepare your loved ones who are receiving the assets with the right financial guidance. This will help them to feel empowered with the knowledge, skills and confidence they need to make smart financial decisions with their assets and work towards reaching their own goals. RBC Dominion Securities advisors are available to assist in providing financial guidance as well as educational strategies for your loved ones.

Should you choose to proceed with a joint account, it is important that you ensure that the account attributes align with your current and future estate planning objectives. To ensure that your circumstances have been properly considered, you are advised to obtain professional advice from a qualified legal advisor.

This article may contain strategies, not all of which will apply to your particular financial circumstances. The information in this article is not intended to provide legal, tax or insurance advice. To ensure that your own circumstances have been properly considered and that action is taken based on the latest information available, you should obtain professional advice from a qualified tax, legal and/or insurance advisor before acting on any of the information in this article.

Appendix – Comparing the joint account options at RBC Dominion Securities

Below you will find a summary of the three types of joint ownership accounts available at RBC Dominion Securities. The chart highlights some of the attributes of the different types of joint ownership accounts and may assist your legal advisor in guiding you in determining which account, if any, may be suitable in meeting your estate planning objectives.

	Tenants In Common	Joint Tenants with Right of Survivorship (JTWROS)	Joint Gift of Beneficial Right of Survivorship (JGBRS)
Who can be accountholder?	Canadian residents who have reached or are over the age of majority in their province or territory of residence. Non-residents of Canada are generally not permitted to be accountholders.	Canadian residents (other than residents of Quebec) who have reached or are over the age of majority in their province or territory of residence. Non-residents of Canada are generally not permitted to be accountholders.	Canadian residents (other than residents of Quebec) who have reached or are over the age of majority in their province or territory of residence. Non-residents of Canada are generally not permitted to be accountholders or successor accountholders.
Number of accountholders	Multiple	Multiple	Only one person can be the accountholder. There can be multiple successor accountholders.
Ownership of the account	Each accountholder has legal and beneficial ownership of their proportionate share of the account. Each accountholder can hold equal or unequal entitlements in the account. ¹	Each accountholder has legal and beneficial ownership of the account and the assets therein in equal shares.	Only the accountholder has legal and beneficial ownership of the account and the assets therein during his/her lifetime. Upon account opening the successor accountholder(s) receives only the beneficial entitlement to the right of survivorship in the account and not to the account or its assets. A successor accountholder only receives legal and beneficial ownership of the account and its assets on death of accountholder.
Tax treatment at time of opening account	At RBC Dominion Securities, transfers from sole ownership account to tenants in common are reported on Summary of Security Dispositions at fair market value for 100% of assets transferred in. Exception if opening account with spouse. ²	At RBC Dominion Securities, transfers from sole ownership account to JTWROS are reported on Summary of Security Dispositions at fair market value for 100% of assets transferred in. Exception if opening account with spouse. ²	No taxable disposition at time of opening the account.
Tax treatment of income earned in the account	Subject to the attribution rules, each accountholder reports income earned in the account in proportion to their interest in the account.	Subject to the attribution rules, each accountholder reports an equal share of the income earned in the account.	Only the primary accountholder reports the income earned in the account.
Instructions on account	Any accountholder can provide instructions on the account, trade on the account or make withdrawals without notifying the other accountholders. Potential loss of control of assets in account.	Any accountholder can provide instructions on the account, trade on the account or make withdrawals without notifying the other accountholders. Potential loss of control of assets in account.	Only the accountholder can provide instructions on account, trade on account or make withdrawals. The account holder retains control of the account and its assets – successor accountholder(s) does not have any right to receive information about the account, give instructions in respect of the account or otherwise deal with the account during the accountholder's lifetime. Only where the accountholder has expressly directed may the successor accountholder have additional roles, such as Trading Authority, Interested Party, or Power of Attorney.
Tax treatment on death of accountholders³	Deemed disposition of accountholder's share of the account at fair market value (unless assets pass to a spouse).	The amount of deemed disposition to report on the deceased's terminal tax return at death depends on how transfer-in of assets was reported at account opening and who has beneficial ownership of the account for tax purposes.	Deemed disposition of 100% of the account at fair market value (unless assets pass to a spouse).

	Tenants In Common	Joint Tenants with Right of Survivorship (JTWROS)	Joint Gift of Beneficial Right of Survivorship (JGBRS)
Who is responsible for paying the taxes owing as a result of the deceased accountholder's death?	The deceased accountholder's estate.	The deceased accountholder's estate.	The deceased accountholder's estate.
Division of account on death of accountholder	Deceased accountholder's share of the account passes through their estate and is distributed as per their Will. If no Will exists, provincial or territorial intestacy laws will apply to the deceased's share.	Deceased accountholder's share passes directly to the surviving joint accountholder(s) in equal shares. ^{4,5}	Deceased accountholder's share passes directly to successor accountholder(s) in equal shares – if more than one successor accountholder, the subsequent account will be held as tenants in common, unless joint written instructions are received from the successor accountholders to convert the account to JTWROS. ^{4,5}
Does RBC Dominion Securities require account to be probated on death of account holder?⁶	Yes. Each accountholder's share of the account passes through his/her estate on death and is distributed as per his/her Will. If no Will exists, provincial or territorial intestacy laws will apply to the deceased's share.	Generally no. RBC Dominion Securities' policy is to treat the JTWROS as a joint tenancy. On the death of one of the accountholders, the deceased's name is removed from the account so that the assets are held by the surviving joint tenant(s). RBC Dominion Securities will not accept any side agreements that purport to deal with the distribution of the JTWROS account assets in a manner other than to the surviving joint tenant(s).	No. On death of the accountholder, the deceased's name is removed from the account so that the assets are held by the successor accountholder(s) in equal shares as tenants in common. The account does not form part of the deceased's estate.
Potential exposure to creditors of accountholder/successor accountholder(s)?	Reduced risk that accountholder's share of account be exposed to creditors or marital disputes of other accountholder(s). It is important the accountholders obtain professional advice from a qualified legal advisor regarding this matter.	Potential risk that whole account may be exposed to creditors or marital disputes of any one of the joint tenants. It is important the accountholders obtain professional advice from a qualified legal advisor regarding this matter.	While the account continues to be a JGBRS, potentially reduced risk that account will be exposed to creditors or marital disputes of successor accountholder(s). It is important the accountholder and successor accountholder(s) obtain professional advice from a qualified legal advisor regarding this matter.
Can a Power of Attorney (POA) open this account?	No, unless expressly permitted to do so in the POA.	No, unless expressly permitted to do so in the POA.	No, unless expressly permitted to do so in the POA.

- 1) Pursuant to the RBC Dominion Securities client account agreements, each accountholder's entitlement in the account is deemed to be equal unless prior to the accountholder's death, written instructions are provided setting out the proportionate entitlements of all accountholders.
- 2) At RBC Dominion Securities, all transfers from sole name accounts to tenants in common accounts or JTWROS accounts are done at fair market value, triggering a 100% disposition that is reported to you on the Summary of Security Dispositions. It is important that you seek advice from a qualified tax advisor on how to report this transaction. For example, when transferring assets into a JTWROS account with only one other person, the Canada Revenue Agency takes the position that the original owner of the assets has disposed of one-half of his/her interest in the assets for proceeds equal to 50% of the fair market value of the property. The amount, if any, of disposition to report on the transferee's tax return at the time of account opening depends on whether there was a change in beneficial ownership.
- 3) No T5008 reporting is required in respect of deemed disposition and no slip will be issued by RBC Dominion Securities to the deceased accountholder. It is up to the deceased accountholder's executor/liquidator, with the assistance of a qualified tax advisor, to report this event properly on the deceased accountholder's terminal tax return. The deceased accountholder's estate is liable to pay the taxes owing as a result of the deemed disposition triggered on death.
- 4) There is no ability to specify the percentage of share that the surviving accountholder/successor accountholder will receive.
- 5) Both JTWROS and JGBRS accounts only benefit accountholders/successor accountholders that are living at the time of an accountholder's death, leaving no entitlement to the account or its assets to the heirs of an accountholder or successor accountholder who died before the deceased accountholder. The assets in the JTWROS and JGBRS account will pass to the accountholder(s)/successor accountholder(s) alive at the date of death of the accountholder in equal shares. There is no ability to name contingent beneficiaries in the event an accountholder/successor accountholder predeceases an accountholder. This may be avoided by leaving the assets in sole name and having the assets pass through the accountholder's estate and distributed in accordance with his/her Will.
- 6) Although RBC Dominion Securities may not require probate to allow the assets to pass to the surviving accountholders, these assets may need to be included in an application for probate should the executor of the deceased accountholder apply for probate or should a third party make a claim on the assets in the account. This matter should be discussed with a qualified legal advisor.

Wealth Management
Dominion Securities

This document has been prepared for use by the RBC Wealth Management member companies, RBC Dominion Securities Inc. (RBC DS)*, RBC Phillips, Hager & North Investment Counsel Inc. (RBC PH&N IC), RBC Global Asset Management Inc. (RBC GAM), Royal Trust Corporation of Canada and The Royal Trust Company (collectively, the "Companies") and their affiliates, RBC Direct Investing Inc. (RBC DI) *, RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc. (RBC WMFS) and Royal Mutual Funds Inc. (RMFI). *Member-Canadian Investor Protection Fund. Each of the Companies, their affiliates and the Royal Bank of Canada are separate corporate entities which are affiliated. "RBC advisor" refers to Private Bankers who are employees of Royal Bank of Canada and mutual fund representatives of RMFI, Investment Counsellors who are employees of RBC PH&N IC, Senior Trust Advisors and Trust Officers who are employees of The Royal Trust Company or Royal Trust Corporation of Canada, or Investment Advisors who are employees of RBC DS. In Quebec, financial planning services are provided by RMFI or RBC WMFS and each is licensed as a financial services firm in that province. In the rest of Canada, financial planning services are available through RMFI, Royal Trust Corporation of Canada, The Royal Trust Company, or RBC DS. Estate and trust services are provided by Royal Trust Corporation of Canada and The Royal Trust Company. If specific products or services are not offered by one of the Companies or RMFI, clients may request a referral to another RBC partner. Insurance products are offered through RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc., a subsidiary of RBC Dominion Securities Inc. When providing life insurance products in all provinces except Quebec, Investment Advisors are acting as Insurance Representatives of RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc. In Quebec, Investment Advisors are acting as Financial Security Advisors of RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc. RBC Wealth Management Financial Services Inc. is licensed as a financial services firm in the province of Quebec. The strategies, advice and technical content in this publication are provided for the general guidance and benefit of our clients, based on information believed to be accurate and complete, but we cannot guarantee its accuracy or completeness. This publication is not intended as nor does it constitute tax or legal advice. Readers should consult a qualified legal, tax or other professional advisor when planning to implement a strategy. This will ensure that their individual circumstances have been considered properly and that action is taken on the latest available information. Interest rates, market conditions, tax rules, and other investment factors are subject to change. This information is not investment advice and should only be used in conjunction with a discussion with your RBC advisor. None of the Companies, RMFI, RBC WMFS, RBC DI, Royal Bank of Canada or any of its affiliates or any other person accepts any liability whatsoever for any direct or consequential loss arising from any use of this report or the information contained herein. ®/™ Registered trademarks of Royal Bank of Canada. Used under licence. © 2020 Royal Bank of Canada. All rights reserved. NAV0217 (08/17)